What is tyranny?

Vietnam was divided into two parts, the North and the South. North Vietnam was communist, South Vietnam was anti-communist. During the Vietnam War, the North and South fought against each other. The North won the war. The entire country came under communist rule. The new government arrested several hundred thousands of military officers and government workers who used to fight for or work for South Vietnam. They put them in “re-education camps”, which were like prison camps. They often tortured and abused the people in the camps. The new government also made up fake charges and arrested people who were wealthy or who held on to old traditions that the new government leaders did not like.

How can people protect themselves against tyranny?

"It was my job to start the fire for the morning tea. I hurried into my trousers and shirt and went outside to bring in rice stalks and coconut shells to fuel the fire. The pale sunlight was tangled in the branches of the great mango tree in the village and the object of much veneration. My grandmother said its great pools of shade attracted spirits that lounged about under the green canopy. We were forbidden to get too close to the tree lest we interfere with the spirits, but when my grandmother wasn't looking Thant would scramble up the trunk like a monkey and steal the fruit" (p. 9).

When is it right to escape a bad situation?

Due to the horrors people in Vietnam experienced under communist rule, many people wanted to escape the country. Here is how one boy explained why his family wanted to escape Vietnam:

"My family and I also wanted to escape immediately but because of my circumstances; I had to wait five years for opportunities to escape. In 1975, I was 14 year old and living with my family of 12 people; I had 5 sisters and 4 brothers. My father was a wealthy businessman in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon, so we were upper class. Because of this, my father was deprived of all his wealth by the Vietnamese Communist government and more brutally than this, they put him in jail, what they call a "re-education camp," for three years. I never forgot the day when ten policemen broke into our house during a birthday party for one of my sisters. They came in, handcuffed my father, and then they took him out of the house and put him in the police car and drove him away. They put us together in the living room, and they stole everything in the house. They took all my father's ten houses and everything in them.

They accused him of being part of the American CIA, collaborating with the "American Empire" and making a fortune on the exploitation of the sweat and blood of hard-laboring civilians. These charges were made up to put him in prison without a trial. In 1978 my father was released from jail. When he realized that life under the Communist rule would be impossible, he immediately began looking for the ways get us out of the country. My eldest brother was a lieutenant in the Vietnamese army, so he had the opportunity to leave for America on an American War ship the day the South Vietnam government collapsed."

What is freedom?

There are many ways that people or governments can infringe on people's freedom. One of these ways is in trying to control what they believe. Following the victory of the communist North Vietnam, the government of Vietnam officially declared itself an atheist state, meaning the government did not support any religion. Not only did it not support any religion, but it forbade its people to enjoy many religious practices. The government claimed that these religious beliefs were old and foolish, of a more primitive people. Many people who still held on to these traditional beliefs and practices were punished. Should a person ever be punished for what they believe?

Traditional vs. New Medicine

In this novel, we see many old traditions and beliefs being practiced and defended. These customs are a legacy of the history and culture of the people. It is interesting to learn about these customs and many of them have real value, even today. One example of the old medicine of Eastern Asia that is still alive today is a procedure called Gua Sha. Gua Sha is a medical treatment in which the skin is scraped with a hard object, like a coin or a spoon, to create light bruising. Those who employ this technique believe that it releases unhealthy elements from injured areas and stimulates blood flow and healing.

Why is it valuable to learn about old ways?

What are the risks of boat travel?

The people who escaped Vietnam had to put themselves in danger in many ways. Even if they were able to make it to a boat and board it, they were still at great risk. It was possible that the boat could sink, they could get lost, run out of food and water, contract a disease, and be attacked by pirates to name a few. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees compiled this data that they estimated:

In 1981, ...452 boats carrying Vietnamese boat people arrived in Thailand carrying 15,479 refugees. 349 of the boats had been attacked by pirates an average of three times each. "578 women had been raped; 228 women had been abducted; and 881 people were dead or missing." An international anti-piracy campaign began in June 1982 and reduced the number of pirate attacks although they continued to be frequent and often deadly until 1990."

According to the UNHCR, 200,000 to 400,000 boat people died at sea.

Does everyone have a breaking point?

Consider how many challenges Mai and her family are going through. They have not given up yet. Another challenge they will face is seasickness.

What is seasickness?

Seasickness, also called motion sickness, is a common disturbance of the inner ear. This is the area of the body that affects your sense of balance and equilibrium. Motion sickness happens when your brain receives conflicting messages about motion and your body's position in space. The conflicting messages are delivered from your inner ear, your eyes (what you see), your skin receptors (what you feel), and muscle and joint sensors. For example, you might become airsick because your eyes cannot see the turbulence that is tossing the plane from side to side. Motion sickness can occur with any mode of travel: on a ship, plane, train, bus, or car.

Often times when people are in desperate circumstances, there are little things that add up to make the situation even worse. Sometimes it is a little thing that can cause a person to reach their breaking point and give up or snap. Putting things in perspective and determining to reach your goal is key to maintaining your sanity.

Should you always share with others?

Most of the time, sharing is a good thing, but sometimes it is very bad. For example, no one wants to share your disease.

What is dysentery?

Dysentery is an intestinal inflammation, especially in the colon, that can lead to severe diarrhea with mucus or blood in the feces. Patients typically experience mild to severe abdominal pain or stomach cramps. In some cases, untreated dysentery can be life-threatening, especially if the infected person cannot replace lost fluids fast enough. Statistics vs. Superstitions

There are many beliefs about luck in the old Vietnamese culture. As Dao is about to have her baby, all are hoping it is born on a lucky day. Consider the following news article:

Defying warnings about the negative health impacts on both mothers and children following C-section surgeries, many families in Vietnam still opt for the method because they want their babies to arrive at a lucky time of day.

Doctors at a three-day maternity healthcare conference ending Saturday in Hanoi said that besides a number of prescribed cesareans, a much larger number of others were decided upon fortunetellers' advice, according to a Tuoi Tre report Friday.

The conference focused on preventing stillbirths and infant deaths.

Wame Baravilala, a consultant on reproduction health for the UN Population Program in Vietnam, told the conference that several countries have control policies for C-sections and the method is only used in 3 percent of deliveries on average.

But the rate can jump to 45-50 percent in countries that don't apply such policies. Vietnam falls in the latter case, and although there are yet full statistics on the national C-section rate, doctors said the 40-50 percent rate is true to the country's leading ob-gyn hospitals like Hanoi Ob-Gyn Hospital and the Central Ob-Gyn Hospital, also in the capital city.

This interesting phenomenon happens in Vietnam and other countries because some people believe in superstitions more than statistics and empirical data. How does a person choose what is true? Who should make decisions about health, individuals or their doctors? Discuss this as a class.

Vietnamese Boat People

The ‘Boat People of Vietnam’ seemed to encapsulate all the suffering Vietnam had suffered from 1965 to 1975. Despite the end of the Vietnam War, tragedy for the people of Vietnam continued into 1978-79. The term ‘Boat People’ not only applies to the refugees who fled Vietnam but also to the people of Cambodia and Laos who did the same but tend to come under the same umbrella term. The term ‘Vietnamese Boat People’ tends to be associated with only those in the former South who fled the new Communist government. However, people in what was North Vietnam who had an ethnic Chinese background fled to Hong Kong at the same time fearing some form of retribution from the government in Hanoi.

In late 1978, Indo-China degenerated into wholesale confrontation and war between Vietnam and Kampuchea (Cambodia) and China. In December 1978, Vietnam attacked Kampuchea while in February 1979, Vietnam attacked Chinese forces in the north. These two conflicts produced a huge number of refugees

Many in what was South Vietnam feared the rule of their communist masters from what had been North Vietnam. Despite the creation of a united Republic of Vietnam in 1975, many in the South feared retribution once it was found out that they had fought against the North during the actual war. The rule exerted in Ho Chi Minh City (formally Saigon) was repressive as this was seen as a bastion of ‘Americanisation’. Traditional freedoms were few. It has been estimated that 65,000 Vietnamese were executed after the end of the war with 1 million being sent to prison/re-education camps where an estimated 165,000 died.

Many took the drastic decision to leave the country – an illegal act under the communist government. As an air flight out of Vietnam was out of the question, many took to makeshift boats in an effort to flee to start a new life elsewhere. Alternately, fishing boats were utilized. While perfectly safe for near-shore fishing, they were not built for the open waters. This was coupled with the fact that they were usually chronically overcrowded, thus making any journey into the open seas potentially highly dangerous.

No one can be sure how many people took the decision to flee, nor are there any definitive casualty figures. However, the number who attempted to flee has been put as high as 1.5 million. Estimates for deaths vary from 50,000 to 200,000 (Australian Immigration Ministry). The primary cause of death was drowning though many refugees were attacked by pirates and murdered or sold into slavery and prostitution. Some countries in the region, such as Malaya, turned the boat people away even if they did manage to land. Boats carrying the refugees were deliberately sunk offshore by those in them to stop the authorities towing them back out to sea. Many of these refugees ended up settling in the United States and Europe. The United States accepted 823,000 refugees; Britain accepted 19,000; France accepted 96,000; Australia and Canada accepted 137,000 each.

Can you sympathize with Mai's grandmother and the other passengers? Can you feel their fears and frustrations, along with their hopes and joys? Goodbye, Vietnam is a fictional story based on real historical circumstances. The author, Gloria Whelan is not Vietnamese. Neither was she a refugee of any kind. She had to do research to learn about the real circumstances of the people her characters represent.

Using the article about "Vietnamese Boat People" included in the Background section of this lesson (you may find it useful to do your own research as well), compare and contrast Gloria Whelan's portrayal in Goodbye, Vietnam of these historical circumstances with the information about real Vietnamese refugees in the article.

Tet Festival in Vietnam

Tet is the most important festival of the Vietnamese calendar. It marks the beginning of the lunar New Year, which is celebrated in China as well. Festivities occur throughout the country, but this is a family holiday and many of the traditions of observance occur in the home. The official holiday lasts three days, but celebrations continue for at least the first week of the New Year.

Before The New Year

Preparations begin about a week before the New Year. Homes are cleaned out in the hopes of getting rid of the past year's bad luck, and some families go so far as to repaint their house's exterior. It also is believed to be lucky to buy new clothes and get a fresh haircut. At midnight on New Year's Eve, Vietnamese families conduct the ritual Le Tru Tich, which involves gongs, firecrackers and other noisy items to chase out the old year and ring in the new.

New Year's Day Traditions

On New Year's Day, most families meet to exchange gifts and have a traditional meal, and also perform a ceremony to appease the kitchen god. Homes are decorated with the hoa mai flower and all thoughts of sadness are supposed to be avoided. Children are encouraged not to fight or cry and anyone in mourning is shunned because it is bad luck to be associated with death on New Year's Day. Many families plant a new year's tree in front of the house and wrap it with lucky red paper. The tree is removed at the end of the first week of the New Year. After the family meal, many Vietnamese attend the local pagoda to worship ancestors.

In The Cities

In major cities, such as Ho Chi Minh and Hanoi, Tet celebrations are more similar to New Year celebrations in western countries. People attend events in dance clubs and bars. This is a time of enjoyment and there is a lot of eating and drinking involved in the celebrations. Fireworks are set off to scare away the evil spirit Na A. Stores and neighborhoods decorate with colored lights and red banners.

Food

Food is an important part of the Tet celebrations. The Vietnamese believe that what a person does on New Year's Day dictates the course of the rest of the year, and eating a lot represents the hope that no one will go hungry in the coming year. In the days leading up to the holiday, the Vietnamese traditionally give gifts of food to family members and friends. The traditional meal includes foods such as bang, a bamboo and pork soup; bang chung, a sticky rice cake filled with pork and beans; and orange sticky rice. Even the ancestors are given food gifts. Families leave a five fruit tray at the altar.

Who needs a compass?

In this section of the novel, Loi, thanks to his experience on his father's boat, is able to tell that they are off course without using a compass. How is this possible? Read the following excerpt about navigation:

Astronomy is the oldest of the sciences, and quite possibly the oldest use of astronomy is navigating by the stars. This craft dates from prehistoric times among humans, and is even practiced by certain animals.

For example, during the 1960s, a study undertaken by New York's Cornell Lab of Ornithology demonstrated through use of planetarium simulations that the indigo bunting, a brilliantly blue bird of old fields and roadsides, migrates at night using the stars for guidance. It learns its orientation to the night sky from its experience as a young bird observing the stars.

Some primitive tribes accomplished amazing feats of pathfinding using only the sky as their guide. The Māori came to New Zealand from eastern Polynesia, probably in several waves between the years 1280 to 1300. With no instruments or tables to consult, they very carefully observed the night sky as well local weather patterns and ocean currents.

Like the Indigo Bunting, a bird with a built-in compass, we are all born with a built-in "moral compass," which guides us to know what is right and wrong. Just like how people will get lost if they do not pay attention to a compass or stars to guide them, they will also be "lost" morally, if they ignore their "moral compass."

Loi showed integrity by risking his own safety so that the others on the boat could eat. He used his skill of fishing to catch the sea turtle so everyone could have food. What is humane treatment?

Consider the following news article from 1988 describing the conditions of some of the refugee camps in Hong Kong:

Refugees sail north to Hong Kong from the northern Vietnamese port of Haiphong, a 500-mile journey through the South China Sea that takes about 15 days with good luck and fair weather. Refugees from the north, Mr. French said, are poor people with few skills, no foreign languages and no ties to countries outside Vietnam.

"More and more we have the men, women and children nobody else wants," Mr. French said. Barracks-Like Buildings

A teacher at a closed camp on Hei Ling Chau, a tiny rocky island that was once the site of a leper colony, said there are children there who had never seen a dog or walked on grass.

Hei Ling Chau is about an hour's boat ride from central Hong Kong, and a recent visitor was asked to send picture postcards of the city because most of the refugees had only caught a glimpse of it as they landed.

The camp's barracks-like cinder-block buildings house 2,900 people in spaces meant for 2,400. Two meals a day and a snack are served and there is one toilet for every 90 people.

"We try to take the children on field trips, to see what real life looks like," said Nilda Bernardo, a teacher with World Relief, which runs programs in Hei Ling Chau.

"Sometimes we take them into a flat there so they can see what a kitchen and a living room and a bedroom look like," she said.

Christopher Bale, the director of the Oxfam relief agency in Hong Kong, said the three closed camps, surrounded by high steel fences and supervised by prison guards, are "just barely adequate for short-term stays, but there are almost 5,000 people who have been living in these places for three years, and 3,000 who have been in them for more than five years." 'No One Has Asked to See Us'

Bao Ntuyen, a 12-year-old from Haiphong, said he had been living in Hei Ling Chau for four years and no resettlement official had ever interviewed him or his uncle, a farmer who has no ties to anyone outside Vietnam.

"No one has asked to see us," the boy said, "so we are learning English. We want to go to a free country, somewhere where they play football."

Do you think it would have been better for some of these people to stay in Vietnam? What should be done about these people?

What is scabies?

Scabies ...is a contagious skin infection caused by the mite Sarcoptes scabiei. The mite is a tiny, and usually not directly visible, parasite which burrows under the host's skin, causing intense allergic itching. The infection in animals other than humans is caused by a different but related mite species, and is called sarcoptic mange.

Scabies is classified by the World Health Organization as a water-related disease. The disease may be transmitted from objects, but is most often transmitted by direct skin-to-skin contact, with a higher risk with prolonged contact.

Kim's mother went to great lengths and personal risk to help people by treating illnesses including an epidemic of scabies. One of the risks she took was being taken from her daughter and arrested. Do you think she did the right thing?

What is hope?

The following is a true account of a woman named Linda Thong, who was a in her twenties when she and her family escaped Vietnam on a boat. She had similar experiences to Mai's family. This excerpt is about her new life in the United States:

...When first I arrived in California, I worried too much because I didn't speak English, just said hello and good morning. One month later I gave birth to my third children. We had no money and clothes for my baby. I remembered three months we slept on the floor because we didn't have a bed, and the Government gave us money but not enough. I came here with my husband, two daughters and three brothers. One is my brother and two brothers in-law. We lived together in the apartment with two bedrooms, one bath. It was very hard for us. My husband and three brothers found jobs at the swap-meet on the weekends. Weekday we went to school and studied English. My husband found another job and the owner paid for him five hundred dollars a month. After two years we saved 5,000 dollars to open a small business. We sold toys step by step, we made good money. Now I am 39 year old and I have five children; two girls and three boys. Two are in University at UCI. One is second year, one is first year. They are both taking Biology. One boy is in high school, and another one is in the six grade. My last boy is in Kindergarten. My children very nice study hard and listen to parents. We bought a house, cars and good business. My husband and I work very hard for my children. We want our children have education in the future and to be good people. I always thank God very very much for my family have freedom.

Although it was difficult to adjust to their new environment at first, Linda Thong and her family did their best and worked hard to provide the life they hoped for in their new country. Her story is like many others who escaped the horrors of the post-war Vietnam.
